JACKSON

WORST TOWN IN KENTUCKY

Present Moral Condition a Fit Sequel to its Political Degradation.

Newspaper Men Dare Not Tell the Truth.

Special dispatch to Commercial Tribune from Jackson, Ky., says: The red sign of the feud is on every door-post in Jackson, and a town of 1,500 people is divided against itself. Dr. B. D. Cox was the latest victim of the feudists. About 8 o'clock on Sunday night, April 13, Dr. Cox started from his office to answer a professional call. Three reports of a shotgun were heard, and he fell, riddled with buckshot, not a dozen paces from the stairs which led to his office on the second floor of a building at the corner of Court and Main streets. So tense is the situation in Jackson now that no one dares go on the streets after dark. The number of traveling salesmen has been reduced to one-half, and Circuit Judge D. B. Redwine has refused to try Tom Cockrell, accused of the murder of Benjamin Hargis, because it brings into opposition the two factions, and the judge thinks that it would be worth his life to sit in the case, whether the verdict went one way or the other.

A number of citizens have left town. Some of them were closely identified with the leaders in the feud and feared that they might be shot down at any time; others did not want to live in a town where open warfare seemed imminent, and where the fact of being the lukewarm friend or sixth cousin of some feud leader might result in the loss of one's life. Governor Beckham has been appealed to for aid, but two judges elected by the bar have refused to serve, and has intimated that he will appoint a special judge to try the Cockrell-Hargis case.

REOPENING OF THE FEUD.

On the night of February 19, Tom Cockrell, the town Marshal, and Ben Hargis, a son of James Hargis, County Judge, quarreled in John A. Bailey's billiard parlor. Cockrell was knocked down, but he got up, shouting. Hargis had his revolver out, and in the exchange of bullets Cockrell fell with a bullet in the forehead, after being himself twice wounded.

Dr. Cox was guardian for the Cockrell boys. There was a large family of them, and he had the management of the estate, which was worth from $10,000 to $15,000, almost a large fortune in this section. Dr. Cox was himself a young man, comparatively being between 35 and 38 years old. He had married a Miss Cardwell, a sister to the famous railroad detective, Jerry Cardwell, who killed John G. Hargis, and really inaugurated the Cardwell-Hargis feud. This with the added fact of his business connection with the Cockrell boys, had its effect in the feeling entertained against him by the opposing faction.

Six feet four inches in height, immensely popular and entirely fearless, Dr. Cox did not take due precaution and went abroad after nightfall, a thing that citizens have not done here in months unless under pressure of the greatest necessity. On the night of his death he received a call to attend William Back, and with satchel in hand, was preparing to walk down Court street to the Back residence when he was shot.

There were twenty-seven holes in his body, and four of the shots penetrated his heart. His friends claim that the first two shots brought him down, and that afterward a figure was seen hastening out from the shadow of a building, and, standing over the prostrate man, poured the third charge into his body to make sure of the work.

The funeral was the largest ever seen in Breathitt county, and fully 800 people followed the body to the grave. That Dr. Cox was aware of his danger is evidenced by the fact that not half an hour before his death he said to a friend: "I don't like the looks of things to-night. The signs are not right, and somebody is going to be killed. It may be me for all I know."

FEUDS MERGE TOGETHER.

The majority of the feuds of Breathitt county merge into one another, almost invariably having some point of contact. It is always hard to say where one feud begins and another ends, but the beginning of the Cardwell-Hargis feud can probably be traced to the sensational duel between Jerry Cardwell and John G. Hargis. It grew out of a race for town Marshal ten years ago, in which Cardwell was a candidate, and the Hargises placed a man in the field against him.

The primary quarrel between the men was over the vote of a negro. Hargis wished to prevent him from voting, and as he was an adherent of Cardwell, that candidate naturally insisted that he be given the right to cast his ballot. It was in October, 1886, that the men finally had their death struggle. Hargis boarded a train on the Lexington & Eastern road at Beattyville Junction. He was intoxicated and disorderly and the conductor called on the train detective, who, at that time, happened to be Jerry Cardwell.

No one seems to know exactly how the fight began, but at any event almost as soon as Cardwell stepped into the door of the coach both men were firing at each other in the aisle of the crowded coach. Intense excitement prevailed and passengers crawled under the seats during the fusillade. Both men emptied their revolvers. Hargis was shot over the right eye, in the neck and in the body. Any of the wounds would have proven fatal. Cardwell received one bullet in the right arm and another in his right breast. He owed his life to the fact that this second bullet struck a bundle of papers in his pocket and was slightly deflected.

ALITTLE KILLED.

Another killing which was by some thought to have been connected with this same feud was that of Al Little, who was at the time proprietor of the notorious Red House, which is known far and wide throughout Breathitt and the adjoining counties. Many of the fatal brawls which have occurred in Jackson happened at this red light house, on a hill near the edge of town. This is a local option town, but moonshine could be obtained at all times at this resort. Little was shot by Jesse Fields, a famous sharpshooter and Eversole adherent, in the French-Eversole feud, but Fields' adventurous career was itself terminated by Mose Feltner before he could be prosecuted for the killing of Little.

The father of the feuds in Breathitt county was Captain Bill Strong, a half Indian who figured in the Strong-Ames and the Strong-Callahan feuds. The former feud began on account of the alleged stealing of shots from Strong by the Ames faction. Open warfare resulted. The Strong household was besieged by his opponents in force, and it was only by chance that a little negro boy managed to slip through the lines with a horse and ride to Jackson for Edward Marcum, who was Strong's Lieutenant in the Civil war. Marcum gathered a party of friends and rode to the assistance of his former Captain.

A pitched battle followed in a cornfield, with many fatalities. Later the Strong-Ames forces again met and fought it out until there were several dead on each side. Following this, bushwhacking was indulged in for several years, until the Ames were driven from the county. The Strong, however, were to meet with reverses, for in their feud with the Callahans, which arose soon after, Captain Bill Strong was waylaid on his way home from church in company with his daughter and her child and was shot to death. He was the backbone of his faction, and with him out of the way the Callahans had no difficulty in driving his sons and their nearest relatives from the county.

WORST TOWN IN KENTUCKY.

Jackson is known as one of the worst towns in Kentucky. It is located on the Kentucky river and is arranged on several hills. The four streets which bound the court house square are the principal thoroughfares. There is no street lighting, yet a wayfarer at night carries a lantern at the risk of having it made the target for some drunken marksmen, and it is no unusual thing to find lanterns in the middle of the street in the morning where they have been thrown the night before, so that the owner might get out of the range of fire.

Citizens are often compelled to throw away their lights and lay flat on their faces in the mud to avoid shots. The discharge of revolvers in the streets is taken as a matter of course, and this shooting became so common in one section near the river that it was dubbed "the Philippines." The true situation here has just leaked out, as the correspondents have not dared publish the news, and the most serious trouble is anticipated at any time.

Horsemesh as Food in France.

The taste for horsemesh in Paris which is demonstrated by the banquet does not date back many years. It was under the Second Empire, during the expedition to Morocco, that it came into the dietary of the French soldiers. The expeditionary column had nothing to live upon, so it slew and ate the horses, and every one was agreeably surprised at the quality of the meat. Emile Decroix, a veterinary surgeon with the troops, resolved to profit by the experience. Arrived in Paris, he set about popularizing the horse as food. He distributed meat gratuitously to the poor population. In his propaganda he interviewed the Prefect and Ministers, and even had audience of the Emperor. He opened the first hippophagous butchery in the Place d'Italie in 1866. It was the siege of Paris that caused the flesh of horses to be regarded as a positive delicacy. That was 32 years ago. How has the nation progressed since? Paris has now 350 shops where they sell the meat; all are prospering. Last year 30,000 horses were slaughtered and eaten. Rouen, Toulouse, Lille and Orleans have all taken to horse eating. The meat is cheaper than beef. Whereas one pays three francs the liver for good fillet of beef, it only costs six francs if you take horse. The animal that was eaten the other day with such eclat had a singular history. It won several steeple chases at Antwerp and Bois-Colombes. It was an English mare, and its name was Nell Gwynn. In November 1893, the crowd on the course was very irritated at the defeat of the favorite in the preceding race. It revenged itself by throwing stones. One of the stones struck the left eye of Nell Gwynn and ruined the sight. Nevertheless the noble beast won the race. She deserved a better fate than to be eaten.

In many instances attacks of cholera morbus terminate fatally before medicine can be procured or a physician summoned. The safe way is to keep at hand a reliable medicine for use in such cases. For this purpose there is nothing so sure as Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. W. E. Bosworth, of Lafayette, Ala., says: "In June, 1900, I had a serious attack of cholera morbus and one dose of Chamberlain's Colic Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy gave me relief in fifteen minutes." I don't like full moons. I love wan and waning lights that half conceal and half reveal the beauties of the midnight world. Let others rave about the glory of over-full harvest moons that drip with luscious splendor, like some great juicy plum held carelessly by a thoughtless hand, but give me the tender reserve of a moon from which time has stolen something of its youthful excess and meridian completeness leaving a chastened beauty in its stead, like the smile on a face that has been washed by tears.

Read It in His Newspaper.

George Schaub, a well known German citizen of New Lebanon, Ohio, is a constant reader of the Dayton Volkszeitung. He knows that this paper aims to advertise only the best in its columns, and when he saw Chamberlain's PainBalm advertised therein for lame back, he did not hesitate in buying a bottle of it for his wife, who for eight weeks had suffered with the most terrible pains in her back and could get no relief. He says: "After using the Pain Balm for a few days my wife said to me, 'I feel as though born anew,' and before using the entire contents of the bottle the unbearable pains had entirely vanished and she could again take up her household duties." He is very thankful and hopes that all suffering likewise will bear of her wonderful recovery. This valuable liniment is for sale by all druggists.

MISSING ALL THE FUN.

How the R. E. Lee Beat the Natchez in a Famous Race.

John West, engineer at the pumping station of the Louisville Water Company, is the only surviving person who was aboard the Robert E. Lee when she made her celebrated race with the Natchez, says the Courier-Journal. It is said that Mr. West's description of the race is the most correct statement of the contest ever published.

He has given his recollection of the boat and the race as follows: "The Robert E. Lee was built at New Albany, Ind., by Capt. John W. Cannon, left the Portland wharf in the fall of 1866 for New Orleans to go into the Vicksburg trade. Her engineers were Wm. Perkins, first engineer; Thomas Berry, second engineer; John West and Huston, as strikers; her engines were forty-two inches in diameter, ten-foot stroke, eight boilers, forty-two inches in diameter, thirty-two feet long, four flues, her paddle wheels were forty-five feet in diameter, eighteen by three feet buckets. I remained on her for three years, then went with Commodore Parson on the Yazoo river to take charge of one of his boats.

"The steamboat Natchez came out in 1869. She was built in Cincinnati and was expressly destined to be faster than the Lee, the two boats running in the same trade from New Orleans to Vicksburg—400 miles—the Lee leaving every Tuesday and the Natchez on Saturday. There was great rivalry between the two boats so that each one was the faster. In the spring of 1870, the Lee left the Vicksburg trade and went into the New Orleans and Louisville trade, leaving every other Thursday. The Natchez dropping out of the Vicksburg trade and going to St. Louis, leaving every Saturday. The talk became so general about the two boats that Capt. Leathers, of the Natchez, published that she would leave on the Lee's day and show she was the faster boat of the two, so that threw the gauntlet to Capt. Cannon. On the arrival of the Lee at Vicksburg from New Orleans, I went aboard of her and asked Capt. Cannon if he was going to make the race. He said no, but would leave on his regular day and pay no attention to the Natchez, but when he arrived in the Ohio river the merchants got after him, so he changed his mind and on the arrival at Cairo he telegraphed to me to be ready to go on the boat to New Orleans when she arrived. Then I knew the race was coming off. We arrived at New Orleans Tuesday evening, then went to work to prepare for the race Thursday evening at 5 o'clock.

On the down trip we had taken on pine knots for fuel at Red River, at New Orleans we took on all the coal we could carry without overloading the boat, every thing that was surplus on her was taken off to lighten her.

CAPT. CANNON'S ORDERS.

"On Thursday Capt. Cannon called all the officers together for instructions as to leaving on Thursday, June 30. He wanted everybody ready at 5 o'clock, the pilot in the pilot house, but not in sight, the engineer at the throttle valve, the mate to have one man could balance it clear of the wharf, and one line out with a man to cut it with an ax, and he would not ring any bells, but would give one tap of the bell for all instructions. The United States Inspector, Whitmore, of New Orleans, came aboard just before we left and inspected the safety valve and the lock-up valve, looked and sealed the same.

"At 5 o'clock one tap was given, man cut the rope, one man on the stage plank to tip it clear of the wharf, pilot in the pilot house rang the backing bells and the 'Wild Bob' was off. The reason of this was the Natchez had made her bags that she would not leave until after the Lee, for she was going to pass her in sight of New Orleans. As we passed St. Mary's market, where all time is taken from, a cannon was fired. As the Natchez passed the same given point a cannon was fired, only one minute and a few seconds difference, and that was the closest she ever came to us.

TROUBLE WITH THE MACHINERY.

"Now our difficulties. We had a five-inch hot water pipe to pull apart in the hold, but we repaired it without stopping. This happened about five miles from New Orleans. Also during the night we sprung a leak in one of our boilers and it began to look like we would have to go to the bank, for it was putting out 'the fire' under three boilers and we were hardly able to supply it with the doctor pump, the leak was so great. We tore down the sheet iron work under the boilers and made the inspection. We discovered that there was no danger in it if we could only stop the leak. We took hemp and cut it into bits. Then we put the hemp in the pump chamber and started the pump and forced the hemp into the boiler and repeated it until we finally got the leak stopped. All this time the Natchez was pulling upon us. Just before daylight I stepped out on the guards to see how close she was and just at that time they opened their fire and I thought she was within about 40 yards of us. At that time we were getting in shape again, then we began to pull away from her. Some time in the morning Capt. Cannon came into the engine room and requested Mr. Perkins not to run the boat so fast as we were rapidly pulling away from the Natchez. Mr. Perkins said to him that the Natchez was not bothering him, we were after the steamer Princess, horns at Natchez which had the fastest record up to that time, but Capt. Cannon said we were too far behind to take them, but we took them anyway. We were out on the wharf to see her go by and she was going then if she ever did in her life. Excursion boats and tugs went up the river to watch the race. The Mississippi bank from New Orleans to St. Louis was crowded with people camping out to see the boats go by.

"A person told me two years afterward that he was one of the party of twenty who camped out seventy miles above New Orleans to watch the boats go by. Some of them had come as far as fifty miles from the interior. Of course they had their jug with them, and had sampled it too much. They left two men to which for the coming of the boats and the others went to sleep also, and never wakened until next morning, when the boats were up above Red River. They had missed all the fun. At every city on the river there were big crowds out day and night. At St. Louis there were excursion boats crowded with people, and the boats extended as far down the river as twenty miles. The Iron Mountain Railroad, running parallel with the river, was full of excursion trains.

"After the race I went back on the Lee as engineer and remained on her then until 1873, then left to accept my present position as engineer at the pumping station of the Louisville Water Company.

"The officers of the Lee were John W. Cannon, Captain John Mossop, clerk; Jack Sullivan, clerk; Joseph Roberts, clerk; John St. Steward; Ed Cummings, mate; Capt. Wm. Conner, pilot; William Perkins, first engineer; Thomas Berry second engineer; John West assistant; George Brown assistant; Joseph McCrory, striker; Thomas Hayden, striker."

GIRL KIDNAPED

By Employees of Buckskin Bill's Wild West Show, Four of Whom Have Been Arrested.

Ashland, Ky., June 23.—Four employees of Buckskin Bill's Wild West show were arrested here this afternoon charged with kidnaping and repeatedly assaulting a fifteen-year-old girl. The show was at Vanceburg yesterday and the afternoon performance broke up in a fight. During the row Laura Belle Murray, the pretty fifteen-year-old daughter of William Murray, a prominent Lewis county farmer living at Ruggles, became separated from her parents and was seized by one of the employees of the show. Despite her screams, which were not noticed in the general confusion, she was carried to a van on board the show train. She was kept a prisoner in the van, and it is alleged, was repeatedly assaulted by different men during the night. No night performance was given and the show left for this city.

C. R. Moriarty, trainmaster of the Cincinnati division of the Chesapeake and Ohio, who chanced to be in Vanceburg, was told of the disappearance of the girl by her distracted father and learned from a brakeman on the show train that a girl was seen on board the train just as it was pulling out and began the search. When the train reached Garrison, a station several miles from Vanceburg, the men who had the girl prisoner became alarmed and threw her from the train. Moriarty saw the girl fall, jumped off the train and picked her up. She was not much hurt by the fall, but was nearly dead from the horrible treatment.

Mr. Moriarty caught the next passenger train and brought the girl to this city. He notified Sheriff John Hanty, who immediately summoned the train crew and in company with Moriarty and Officer Frank, of the city police force, went to the grounds. The men had just made up as cowboys and Indians for the afternoon performance, but the brakeman identified four of the men and, despite a liberal display of guns and pistols, they were arrested and taken to jail at Catlettsburg. There they gave their names as William Patterson, Robert Hays, Mick McCarty and James H. Harding.

The young girl though nearly crazed, identified three of the men, though it is thought more men, including some of the Indians were guilty. Sheriff Hanty wired Sheriff Bowman, of Lewis county, who took the three men to Vanceburg this afternoon. Harding, the fourth man is in jail at Catlettsburg. Sheriff Hanty thinks he is innocent, but will hold him as a witness and does not want to risk him at Vanceburg, where it is feared the men will be lynched. Mr. Moriarty took the girl back to her home at Ruggles. She is in a serious condition.

Sorrow and headache follow him all the days of his life.

He hopped from his bed in the morning and his foot is pierced by the tack of disappointment.

Artistic Monuments

COST NO MORE THAN PLAIN ONES IN White Bronze.

Marble is entirely out of date. Granite soon gets moss-grown, discolored, requires constant expense and care, and eventually crumbles back to Mother Earth. Besides, it is very expensive. White Bronze is strictly everlasting. It cannot crumble with the action of frost. Moss growth is an impossibility. It is more artistic than any stone. Then why not investigate? It has been adopted for nearly one hundred public monuments and by thousands of delighted customers in all parts of the country. It has been on the market over 25 years and is an established success. Many granite dealers have bought White Bronze for their own burial plots. We have hundreds of beautiful designs of all grades of work, and want to have you see them if you are interested in a monument, headstone, marker or grave-cover. Difficult Digestion

That is dyspepsia. It makes life miserable. Its sufferers eat not because they want to, but simply because they must. They know they are irritable and fretful; but they cannot be otherwise. Johnny's Vacation.

Johnny Mathias, of Central City, came over to Hartford Monday to spend his vacation, and have a good time. But Johnny misjudged the amount of booze that a visitor to Hartford should put in his good-time mixture, and in consequence became amazingly sociable; so much so, in fact that some one complained to the marshal, who took him in tow, and turned him over to Jailer Black. Johnny proceeded to jail as pleasantly as if that feature had been on the regular program of his vacation, but he insisted on remaining out in the corridor. When the jailer opened the massive door leading to a cell, Johnny began to regard his good time at an end, and began crying. The other prisoners who had become collared to their surroundings, began to guff Johnny about playing the baby act, when he showed them he knew how to swear as well as cry.

For a while Johnny made things extremely interesting for the boys in jail, but finally quieted down, slept off his jag and was released from jail. We think this was Johnny's first experience in jail, and venture a prediction that he will mark Hartford off his list of "good-time" places.

Fire at Central City.

Central City, Ky., June 24, 1902. DEAR THOMAS:—I arrived here last night at 10:30, at 5:40 this morning the town was set on fire in honor of my visit. All the business portion across from the Metcalf Hotel is now a smoldering heap. The following is the result:

Geo. Gordon & Son, saloon, loss $2,000, insurance $800.
Herman Robs, restaurant, loss $2,000, insurance $500.

Dr. Jas. McDowell, restaurant, loss $1,000, no insurance.
John T. May, saloon and cold storage, loss $3,000, insurance $300.

The depot and Metcalf Hotel were both on fire, but owing to the fact that no wind was blowing they were both saved. It was a splendid opportunity to watch a big fire. It broke out in Gordon & Son's saloon, being caused by the explosion of a gasoline lamp. I give these particulars for the paper.

If they do not set Lexington on fire when I arrive to-day, I shall feel that my visit is not properly appreciated. If there is to be anybody killed or anything burnt in Hartford, postpone it until I come back.

Central City is in a chaotic condition. The railroad track is strewn with rubbish of all kinds, chiefest among which are empty kegs, bottles and jugs.

Well, as my train will soon be here and one town has been burnt in my honor, I am satisfied for one day. Excuse haste. J. D.

Fiendish Murder.

Central City, Ky., June 23.—Merryday Stone, aged forty-eight, was murdered about 8 o'clock last night. He was stabbed in the throat while eating supper and was knocked on the head with a hammer or hatchet. He was considered one of the best colored men in the county. J. R. Wooten, former Marshal, is working on the case and will use his bloodhounds. It is stated Stone had a few hundred dollars and was thinking of buying the property. The motive was robbery, as Stone was well liked by all black and white.

At the inquest held over the body of Merryday Stone, the evidence was so strong against Lewis Tett, the negro boarder, that he was locked up in jail charged with the murder.

Electric Death.

New York, June 24.—Mrs. J. D. Anderson met death at Croton, N. Y., in a peculiar manner. She was walking through her husband's store, carrying a pan of cherries, when she stopped and raised her hand to turn on an electric lamp and to steady herself she is supposed to have rested the pan against an iron railing about the counter.

The light current was evidently grounded and she received a shock of 1,800 volts, causing instant death.

HE GOT HOMESICK.

Morris Bowling Deserts the Army and is Arrested.

Says Monday's Owensboro Inquirer: Morris Bowling, of Fordsville, is in the lockup here, awaiting a detachment of soldiers from Ft. Logan, Col., where he is wanted for desertion. He was captured in this city Sunday afternoon by Officers Babbitt and Burdette.

Bowling is a son of E. J. Bowling, of Fordsville. He enlisted at Hartford April 8, 1901, along with his brother Austin Bowling, and was assigned to Company D, Eighteenth U. S. Infantry. When he joined the army he expected to go to the Philippines, but has remained in this country. His brother was placed in an other regiment, and is now on the island and has been for several months.

Camp life with no fighting grew irksome to the young soldier and several months ago he formed a plan to escape. On May 20 while his regiment was stationed at Ft. Logan, he deserted, having provided himself with a suit of citizen's clothes he got away without any trouble and came to Baskett in Henderson county, where he went to work in the mines. His object in deserting was to get home, but he concluded that if he went home he would be arrested so he hid out until he thought the search for him would be over.

His father came to the city Sunday and took the noon train for Baskett. While he was here he confided to a friend that he was going to Baskett after his boy, and the police, seeing him, guessed at the same thing. They accordingly watched for him on his return. They came up on the Texas trail at 4 o'clock and getting off at the depot, walked up the track and over to the I. C. depot where he expected to take the train for Fordsville. The two officers appeared and told Bowling he was wanted. He demanded to know the charge, and he denied his identity. They had witnesses, however, who knew him, and took him along. When they reached the lockup he admitted he was the right man.

Bowling says his only reason for deserting was that he was homesick, and that he would have gone back after he had seen his mother. He is about twenty-three years old. He will be held here until word can be received from his officers.

The convention was called to order by Nicholas Barras, Chairman of the County Committee. J. H. Thomas nominated S. L. Stevens for chairman of the convention, and he was unanimously elected.
